Relatives of the Famous Author Are Summoned to His Bedside at Christiania.

SPECIAL BY CABLE.

Berlin, Aug. 29.-The Vossche-Zeltung hears that Ibsen, the famous author, who has been ill for some time, is worse, and that the end is near. His physicians have notified all his relatives that the author's condition is critical.

Doctor Hendrik Ibsen was born;at Skien, a modest town in Southern Norway, on March 29, 1829. He acquired uncommon proficiency as a prestidigitateur when a boy. At 16 he was apprenticed to an apothecary at Grimstad. He had wished to become a painter, but financial considerations prevented. He prepared himself for the study of medicine, and, in addition, wrote verses lyric and patriotic, his litery ambitions hav ing been inspired by the few books which were available. His literary effusions aroused the derision of his townspeople. but this in no wise discouraged him.

He went to Christiania in 1850 to prepare for his matriculation in medicine. He was then more eddicted to literature than to medicine. After a career of varying for tunes, he founded a weekly paper called The Man, to which he contributed "Norma, Politician's Love," and numerous satirica poems. His reputation grew, and in 1851 he was appointed instructor to the theater established in Bergen by Ole Bull,
